The student demonstrates an understanding that WISR is not currently accredited, and the possible implications of that for them in the short- and long-run. (continued on next page . . .)

The student demonstrates an understanding of:

How the particular degree program is suited to their personal learning interests and career goals.

The strengths and the possible limitations of learning at WISR, as well as the WISR degree.

And alignment with, WISR's mission/values and how they translate into the program learning outcomes that are going to be expected of students in those programs.

WISR's academic emphasis on writing, self-directed learning, self-motivation, interaction and collaboration with others, and action-research.

What's involved in studying at WISR (especially the above stated academic emphases), and whether this is a good fit with their learning style and the sorts of activities they enjoy.

as well as an understanding of . . .

FOR EDD AND MS LEADERSHIP STUDENTS, especially: The interdisciplinary nature of the program and also the opportunity and expectation to have about 30% of their work related to their personal interests and questions for inquiry, and possible future goals—that is, to relate their self-defined interests to the required content of their studies, includes the action-research projects and module assignments.

FOR MFT STUDENTS: The licensure process, professional career expectations, and how all this might relate to their own interests and questions for inquiry, and future goals.

ALL OF THE ABOVE (if applicable)

(check if the student has requested a disabilities accommodation, and answer below)

The student's request for a disabilities accommodation has been reviewed by WISR's leadership.

The student has been informed of what accommodations WISR can and cannot make (indicate in an attached memo or letter what, if any, accommodations WISR will be able to make).

The student understands and accepts the accommodations that can and cannot be made.

In conclusion . . .
